Software Engineer, Operations Tools

at Plated

New York HQ

Plated is a food technology company delivering chef-designed, personalized dinners while also providing a seamless digital experience across multiple platforms.

As a Software Engineer you'll join a tight knit team building the services, data pipelines, and infrastructure that powers our business. The tooling you create will help automate and manage everything it takes to turn bytes into bites: ingredient procurement, shipping and logistics, and the physical production of our products. On any given day you might spend your time optimizing routing software to find the most efficient way to deliver to an area affected by a severe weather event; working directly with our fulfillment centers to use software to minimize errors in our packing process; or giving a talk about a new architectural pattern you would like to introduce to our applications. You will be working on the interface between the digital and physical world at Plated.

Ever written code so well factored that you had a minor synesthetic fit and wanted to eat the result? So hacky (but justifiably so!) that you wanted to burn it? On the Operations Tools team at Plated, you could do both!

What you'll do with us:

- Actively develop and support features of our operations tooling
- Work with product managers and members of the operations team to ideate on new features and drive our long term strategy
- Play a role in defining and designing our company-wide software architecture and technology decisions
- Mentor and teach junior engineers
- Maintain and expand our automated testing suite to improve resilience and decrease error rates
- Promote industry best practices and bring forth innovative ideas that can positively benefit the platform and the engineering guild at large
- Constantly refer to yourself and your teammates as "tools"
- Build software that launches food to people's kitchens from the internet

What you bring to the table:

- At least 2 years of full stack web development experience
- Experience with modern front and back end frameworks (we use React and Rails)
- A proven track record of improving the quality of your craft and helping team members do the same
- Testing experience, including unit testing, integration testing, and continuous integration
- Strong opinions about software development best practices and the ability to integrate and justify them with business needs
- Experience working with distributed service-oriented architectures
- A sense of ownership and pride for what you do and build
